Introduction
During the past 25 years, the number of farmers' markets and local food hubs greatly increased across the U.S. According to the USDA (USDA Farmers Market IUSSDA), the national farmers’ market directory listings have risen from 1,755 in 1994 to 8,600 in 2020. The national trend is especially evident in Oklahoma. Since 2000, the number of farmers’ markets has increased from 17 to 61, and more farmers’ markets are being planned. The full list of farmers’ markets registered with “Shape your future” (a program of TSET) can be found at OK Grown.

General Farmers’ Market Regulations
To participate in a farmers’ market and comply with local/state laws, vendors are expected to know and follow the rules of the farmers’ market and the food-business regulations for their specific products. Requirements and costs common to most or all Oklahoma farmers’ markets’ vendors include:

- Daily Sales Fees: Farmers’ markets require a percentage, usually at most 10 percent, of the day’s sales from each vendor. This fee helps cover market costs and is collected by the farmers’ market.

- Membership Fees: Many farmers’ markets require producers to join the farmers’ market or coalition prior to selling. The fees are collected by the farmers’ market or coalition.

- Sales Tax Permit: The Oklahoma Cooperative Extension Service fact sheet AGEC-2000 explains sales tax requirements for on-farm sales versus farmers’ market sales.

- Organic Certification: Vendors marketing organic products must verify that their products are certified organic. You can also contact ODAFF’s Food Safety Division at (405) 522-6119 to speak with an organic inspector for more details.

- Food-Service Operator Certification: Several Oklahoma municipalities require vendors to have Food-Service Operator Certification (FSOC) to sell certain types of food products within city limits. For additional information on FSOC training and certification costs visit the FAPC website.

- Mobile Food-Establishment Permit, Temporary Food-Establishment Permit and Peddler’s License: Depending on the nature of products sold and the municipality, vendors may be required to purchase mobile and/or temporary establishment licenses or a peddler’s permit. Check with city/county health departments and individual farmers’ markets for details on these requirements. Food business license and permit costs are available in FAPC-185.

Individual Farmers’ Market Requirements and Fees
While many farmers’ markets require similar licensing and fees, each farmers’ market has different dynamics. As a result, individual farmers’ markets may require additional regulations for their vendors. Additional regulations might include the following:

- Booth/Space Fees: Some farmers’ markets require the vendors to pay for the use of a booth or section of the market. The fee is collected by the market.

- Market Promotion Fee: Similar to the Daily Sales Fee, some farmers’ markets require this fee as an advertisement fund. The money collected is used for promotional materials and advertisements. The fees are due to the farmers’ market.

In addition to these types of fees, individual farmers’ markets may require vendors to carry food product liability insurance. While product liability insurance is not currently a regulatory requirement for vendors at most Oklahoma markets, it is advisable for vendors to have coverage to protect against potential lawsuits.
farmers’ market vendors in other states. Oklahoma’s farmers’ markets may eventually require coverage by their vendors too.
