Background

Demand for lamb and goat meat has continued to rise during the last 15 years due to increases in ethnic groups who eat these meats for specific holidays as well as increasing demand from food service industries. Currently, the majority of available goat meat consists of frozen carcasses imported from Australia, New Zealand and Mexico but demand for fresh meat is high and livestock prices reflect that. The 5-year average price for 40-pound to 60-pound kids is $282.23 per hundredweight, reaching over $400.00 in some months of 2021. Not only do sheep and goats have the potential to be a profitable livestock enterprise, they can do so by turning invasive and weedy plant species like sericea lespedeza, ragweed, sumac, blackberry and green briar into a saleable product. Adding sheep and goats to existing operations can help maintain pastures as grasslands and savannahs rather than allowing woody plant species to convert them to woodlands.

Although less prevalent in Oklahoma than cattle, our state has approximately 52,000 sheep and 91,000 goats, and producers need to know where to market their livestock. This document is a directory of the Oklahoma sheep and goat live market auctions as of August 2021 with information on location, time and frequency of sales, as well as where to find past market reports.

To receive the highest prices for your livestock, choose the best location and timing to sell. Review past market reports whenever possible for multiple auctions nearby to optimize prices. Choosing when to market also can affect profitability. During the past 25 years, prices have typically been highest from January through April, when fewer kids are being sold, and lowest from June through September, when many kids are being sold. Although selling market-ready animals when prices are highest may be wise, kidding earlier to sell in January through April will likely require more intensive management than kidding later, like supplemental feeds and shelters from winter weather. Certain holidays and celebrations where goat is traditionally served also can influence prices. For more information on marketing meat goats and a calendar of these holidays refer to OSU Extension Fact Sheet AGEC-622, Meat Goat Marketing and Price Seasonality.
