Bringing the University to You

- As federal funds from the Smith-Lever Act became available in 1914, Oklahoma A & M's President, Henry G. Bennett, organized a program to train female home demonstration agents.
- After training, the agents traveled by horse and buggy, or automobile to rural Oklahoma to promote home economy.

Ms. Coryell worked for 12 months of the year, 6 days a week for $72.92 or $875.00 per year.

Two-thirds of her salary came from the county each month and there was no extra money for feeding for her horse.

Cotton Mattress Program

In the 1930's there was a surplus of cotton being held by the US Department of Agriculture. This prompted the program for home production of cotton mattresses.

The program created a market for the surplus cotton and greatly helped low-income rural families to make a useful product that could improve their home.

The mattresses were free to any family making less than $500.00 the previous year. Due to the depressed economy nearly everyone was eligible for a free mattress!

Mattress making demonstrations were held across the state

Home Demonstration Agents taught men and women leaders to construct the mattress and then they in turn taught others in their own communities.

Materials needed to make a mattress included "10 Yards--8 oz. Ticking," "50 Pounds Long Staple Cotton," "Mattress Roll Needle," and "Thread for Making Roll."

In Times of War

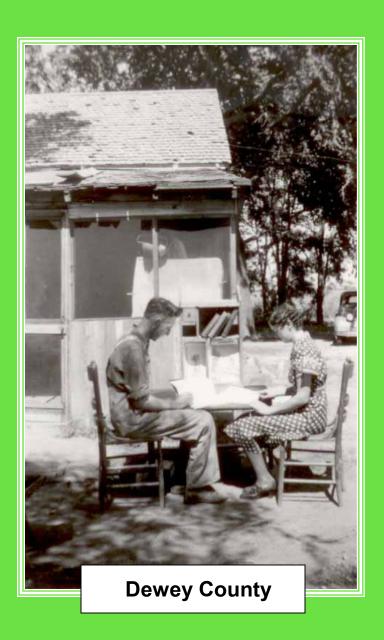

During World War I and World War II club members worked with the Red Cross, helped with the war bond and saving stamp drives, conserved home resources, and performed other vital tasks on the home front. For instance, extension agents actively worked with county clubs to save cooking grease to be used to make explosives during World War II.

Since the 1940's the groups have helped in the war efforts, buying bonds, making wool pants for the boy's in England and collecting and selling scrap metal. Filling and shipping supplies to the soldiers in Viet Nam, making arid filling Christmas stockings for the Desert Storm troops and sending white cotton socks and hugs (cool ties) to the Gl's in Iraq. -Stephens County

Club Houses

Cole Club, McClain County, purchased their own building in the early 40's. It was a cotton gin office they raised funds through egg sales. Each member took a nail keg; covered it with a cushion they constructed so they would have something to sit on.
